Christian Eisert, born in 1976, writes popular comedy shows for television, is a satirist and comedy coach and holds seminars. His previous books on North Korea and on Switzerland were bestsellers and have been translated into several languages.

There comes a stage in the life of every man when he is no longer a young man. The life span that is past seems to be longer than that which is to come. Bestselling writer Christian Eisert is no different from anyone else – the second half of his life is now beginning. What now?

The quest for the answer is expecting quite a lot of him. Not only are the deficiencies growing in number but also the ways of getting rid of them. Hormone pills, photo respiration or relaxation spectacles – Eisert stops at nothing. Very much to the sorrow of the two women in his life. Soon it will be more than just vanity but the question: "What do men gain when they grow older?"

This is a hilariously funny report on the greatest adventure in the life of a man: growing older.
