Kathrin Lange was born in Goslar in 1969. Although she initially had plans to join the police dog squad, her love of books then won the day and she first became a book seller and then writer. She is now a member of the International Thriller Writers and writes bestselling novels for adults and teenagers.

What to begin with looks like a hostage-taking turns into a case for Faris Iskander – with an unexpected personal dimension: a man armed with a suicide vest gives Faris a message saying "Next time you will press the button".

Faris is able to save his own life when the bomb explodes. But he suspects that an old enemy has hatched out a devilish plan for him – and that this foe will stop neither at abduction nor at cold-blooded murder. After all, he wants to witness Faris turning into an assassin.

For readers of Sebastian Fitzek and Max Bentow.
