

The past catches up with all of us. Do you really want to see your old friends again?

Rights sold to:
France (Slatkine)

Eric Berg is the pseudonym of a highly successful German writer who has made a name for himself with historical novels. His crime novels The Fog House, The Shadow Bay and The Coast Grave each turned into an immediate success with the press and booksellers alike.

The four university friends Timo, Philipp, Yasmin and Leonie had lost sight of each other for years. When they meet again on the Internet, they arrange a come-together. But the encounter ends in a terrible crime: one stormy night in September, three people are shot dead while a woman is seriously injured and falls into a coma.

Two years after the massacre, journalist Doro Kagel starts looking into the case again. Bit by bit, she finds out what really happened that night and soon a dreadful suspicion takes root in her mind ...

Eric Berg
The Fog House
[Das Nebelhaus]

Blanvalet TB
416 pages
Format 11,8 x 18,7 cm
December 2014

Press

"Berg weaves together the threads of the plot perfectly – so perfectly that every shift in time increases the suspense, making it even more mysterious who the perpetrator and who the victim could be, such that readers at these points will experience a jolt of adrenaline." Leipziger Volkszeitung

"This is really well done: The Fog House kept me reading for an evening and a night. I didn't want to wait to the next day to find out how everything came together." Christine Westermann, WDR

"The Fog House is suspenseful to the very end ... the story maintains its mystery up to the finish, for only then does Eric Berg reveal the identities of the deceased. As readers breathlessly accompany Doro Kagel on her search for the truth, they will be asking themselves the whole time how a weekend with old friends could escalate in such a way."

Buchwelt.de