Ella Simon worked as a tutor at an international college of tourism before setting up a family and making her passion, writing, into her profession. She has already woven her love for Wales into her historical novels, which she has successfully published under her real name, Sabrina Qunaj.

Anne Perry is an air emergency doctor. She loves her life, her job and her foster mother, Evelyn, who runs a pub in a small village on the Welsh coast.

Only the paramedic, that outrageously attractive Owen Baines, can rub her up the wrong way. In emergencies they are a perfect team, understand each other, no words necessary; outside work, however, Owen shows her the cold shoulder.

But one day, while out on a job they are buried together, Anne gets to know a new side of Owen, while he desperately tries to save her life ...
