Simone Veenstra studied film, theatre and literature. Together with Dorothea Martin she founded the independent "Wildes Dutzend" publishing house. She now lives in Berlin and writes novels, screenplays, audio plays, games and for magazines. For her stories, Simone Veenstra loves going out on tours of discovery – in archives, libraries and preferably on-site.

Old Jakob is driving along the motorway in his converted VW bus, armed with several outdated maps and a month's supply of instant coffee. His aim: take photographs of historical steam engines in the Czech Republic. At a motorway service station he picks up Miro, a taciturn boy who composes sound loops out of ordinary noises and wants to track down his grandmother's teenage sweetheart. The odd couple set off East on a journey of adventure ...
