Katja Berlin, born in 1980, has been busying herself, for several years, with the banality of everyday life, which she is illuminating in a ground-breaking self-experiment. She is the single mother of two cats and lives alternately in Berlin and on the Internet.

Peter Grünlich:

18 % boring job
16 % unpleasant family life
7 % excesses with mates
3 % amusing book projects
56 % tiring years at school and university

What do we do when we ought to be doing our tax returns? What is the most frequently heard sentence in a company? What is guaranteed to be flickering over the screen when we switch on the television? And what is the most frequent printer message when we want to print out something? The author's Graphitti-Blog (www.graphitti-blog.de) contains witty graphs illustrating our daily lives, or at least as we perceive it – surprising, creative, incredibly funny and inimitably good!
