Katja Berlin, born in 1980, has been busying herself, for several years, with the banality of everyday life, which she is illuminating in a ground-breaking self-experiment. She is the single mother of two cats and lives alternately in Berlin and on the Internet.

Peter Grünlich:

18 % boring job
16 % unpleasant family life
7 % excesses with mates
3 % amusing book projects
56 % tiring years at school and university

What do we do when the toothpaste tube is empty? How do we really spend our time at the computer? What do we do when the alarm clock goes off? And how can you tell if someone doesn't have a television? The Graphitti-Blog presents amusing graphs illustrating daily life and particularly what we think we know.
