Iris Röhl, born in 1970, was for many years a part of the media department of Focus magazine, and then for many years the editor of Focus Schule. Today she is a freelance journalist and editor for various media.

What is really important for children? Iris Röhl presents 50 short suggestions on how parents can impart to them the fundamental things in life. Children will usually come to appreciate these things eventually – at least when they are grown up – such as the value of healthy meals, transmission of fine family rituals, persevering in justified decisions, and learning a musical instrument.

- A book for giving, to oneself as well
- With many small, handy tips and retrospective testimonies of adults
