Niklaus Brantschen is one of the great advocates of a Christian Zen Buddhist philosophy, whose attitude toward life can be characterised as aiming for friendship with oneself and with the world. Here, with tongue-in-cheek humour as well as philosophical depth, he presents his reflections on the phenomena of our time. To truly exercise the senses means to transform from the inside seeing to looking, hearing to listening, touching to grasping, smelling and tasting to savouring. The subjects treated in this book include money and God, old age and youth, hearing and seeing.
