Florian Rauch was the manager of a large German undertaking business and has developed a holistic grieving concept. His funeral home AETAS is today a recognized contact centre for continued training opportunities on the subjects of death and grieving.

Nicole Rinder was a medical assistant. After she lost her newborn son, she had the consoling experience of taking enough time for grieving. She offers rehabilitation courses, especially for women who have experienced a stillbirth or have lost a newborn child, and runs a funeral home with Florian Rauch.

Tita Kern is a psychotraumatologist und systemic family therapist. She heads the pilot project KIDS, which supports

When children mourn, when they have questions about death and dying, they need support and guidance. This book is written by experts who deal daily with the sadness of children. They know what it means when children react with questions, with silence, with anger, with loss of appetite, with withdrawal.

The authors provide answers and advice to their adult readers, so that children will be able to experience their grief in a sympathetic, protective environment.

- Concrete help in cases of grieving children after stressful situations. Since 2013 she has been the professional head of the AETAS children's foundation.
