We don't need more, and not even very much. But we do need the right things. It is through the quite simple things in life that we can experience clarity and balance. The pen that has been with us for decades, the home-made jam that smells like summer memories. The walk in Spring, the scent of earth, the sudden feeling of new beginnings – such things can show us that we are part of a greater whole, that it is good just as it is.

With its sensuous design, this book will encourage readers to focus on the essentials of their lifestyle and to again trust in the simple life. It is an opportunity to recognise everyday troubles for what they are: snapshots, something momentary, because just around the corner the next marvel could be waiting. The goodness is already there, around us, in the simple things, everywhere and every day.
